

Assignment 2

The sidebar is so that the user and administrator can access content easily. The sidebar is also useful for adding small images or a logo about the site which can include a little information about the site for example: Recently viewed, most popular page and other things.

The navigation bar will include interactive buttons to pages such as: Home, Why, Help, Contact. Home will include all the things I have mentioned on the diagram above. Why will have why I have created this site and why I've added some of the content I have. Help will include help of how to get around the site and will also include an email address or tell the user that there is an email address on the contact page. I will put this somewhere visible so that the user can contact me if I have missed anything they would like to know. The contact page will contain information on how to contact me so that if they have any problems with the site or would like to know anything else that is not included on the site I can do so. This page will also include the interactive site map so that the user can see where the site is located or where the shop for the site is located.

Each page will have the same format (CSS). This is so that the format of the website all looks the same and the user does not have to learn where everything is on the site. All the text will be the same font but the font size will vary due to titles and headers. The banner will only be included on the homepage so that on other pages it is an easier user experience and if the user would like to see the banner they can do so by going back to the homepage.

The storyboard of the website can be located on the help page. This will be stated on the homepage so that the users know this information.
